Pride and Prejudice

Jane Austen

Chapter One

Paragraph 1 of chapter 1. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 2 of chapter 1. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 3 of chapter 1. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 4 of chapter 1. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or

views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 5 of chapter 1. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 6 of chapter 1. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 7 of chapter 1. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 8 of chapter 1. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or

views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 9 of chapter 1. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 10 of chapter 1. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 11 of chapter 1. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 12 of chapter 1. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or

views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Chapter Two

Paragraph 1 of chapter 2. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 2 of chapter 2. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 3 of chapter 2. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 4 of chapter 2. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or

views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 5 of chapter 2. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 6 of chapter 2. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 7 of chapter 2. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 8 of chapter 2. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or

views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 9 of chapter 2. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 10 of chapter 2. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 11 of chapter 2. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 12 of chapter 2. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or

views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Chapter Three

Paragraph 1 of chapter 3. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 2 of chapter 3. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 3 of chapter 3. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 4 of chapter 3. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or

views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 5 of chapter 3. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 6 of chapter 3. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 7 of chapter 3. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 8 of chapter 3. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or

views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 9 of chapter 3. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 10 of chapter 3. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 11 of chapter 3. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.

Paragraph 12 of chapter 3. It was a truth universally acknowledged, that a single man in possession of a good fortune must be in want of a wife; however little known the feelings or

views of such a man may be on his first entering a neighbour-hood, this truth is so well fixed in the minds of the surrounding families that he is considered as the rightful property of some one or other of their daughters.